Winning at London.

from the Olympic games at London. Our rifle team won at the outset. Now come tidings that Melvin Sheppard, of the Irish-American Athletic Club, takes the finals in the 1,500-meter race, and that John J. Flanagan, of the same organization, wins the hammer throw.

The American riflemen won against teams representing Great Britain, Canada, France, Sweden, Greece, Denmark, and Norway. The best competitors against the Americans were the teams of Great Britain and Canada, which won, respectively, second and third

The all-around superiority of the lis : team winning the contest at the 600points, proves that. As General Drain, settle. the commander of the American squad, said after the trial, the English had one of the best teams ever organized; and it took a better team to win from them.

But the victory is not surprising. Last year at Ottawa, when teams representing the United States, Great Britain, Canada, and Australia competed for the Palma trophy, the American team won with a score that eclipsed all previous records. It made 1,712 out of second in that match, scoring 1,671 ed up a good deal of her charm. The English team came in running contests. Americans have generally taken the shorter distances, and lost the longer ones. Sheppard's victory is over a course about fivesixths of a mile long. The shorter races may easily enough be won by his American associates, but there is not much ground to hope that in distance running our representatives can

In hammer throwing, Flanagan established a new Olympic record of 170 feet 41/2 inches, but did not equal his own record of 181 feet. If he had failed, either of his companions of the New York police force, McGrath and Sheridan, could probably have bested the nearest foreign competitor.

Finding Out Where We Stand.

Uncle Sam has started with his foot rule on a job of measuring which it needed him to do. He is making an inventory—he is taking stock, item by item—of the lumber, minerals, land and water supplies of the United States. Not only is he going to measure and weigh the whole total of our American natural resources, but he is to have the tally sheet in his hand by next New Year Day.

James J. Hill gauged, our lumber, standing and merchantable, at less than 2,000,000,000,000 feet. Our annual cut is about 40,000,000,000, feet. Standing and merchantable, at less than 2,000,000,000,000 feet. Our annual cut is about 40,000,000,000 feet. The authorities give us a ton of coal for every foot of lumber in Mr. Hill's estimate. About 2,000,000,000 tons of iron ore would approach the end of all the higher grade supply now in sight. We have 50,000,000 acres of surveyed ground and 36,500,000 acres of unsurveyed ground as our present stock of land open to settlement. But the area over which settlement. But the area over which your Uncle Samuel must lay his measuring rod includes also 792,000,000 aeres 000,000 acres which have been settled.

Union has enlisted and will co-operate with fifteen bureaus of the National Government. Much of the information needed is already at hand, but not compiled. No little part of it must be obtained from the beginning. But the number of workers is so large and their interest so keen that it is thought the totals will be computed by the clerks of the Census Bureau in good time before the governors reconvene in Washington early next December. We all know what is to be fearedthat the most valuable varieties of timber will be consumed in ten or twelve years; that the available coal supply will be dangerously reduced by the end of the century; that the prices of iron will advance ruinously in the next half century; that the land is not only filling with settlers, but being drained of its substance. If those prospects are before us it is the course

With limited space a single game of basketball or indoor baseball crowds out into the street everybody not playing. The older boys flay such games, and do not often play tether ball or make caves in the sand.

But this year the playgrounds are sustained wholly by voluntary contributions, which puts an entirely new face on the matter. A large fraction vind cation of his work. American victories are the first news of the funds were raised by the children in the schools, of whom those in the seventh and eighth grades are thirteen years of age or more. These larger girls and boys naturally do not relish being turned away from grounds, for which, as they thought, they were giving money. Indeed, the slightest vestige of tact never would have turned

> Now a compromise is proposed. Six school playgrounds are to be opened to the boys of all ages; seven are to be kept for those under thirteen. This is something. But it is a poor way to settle the trouble.

Aborn presentation hot a tew index and local hits are perpit ated, which add largely to the enjoyment of the production. As usual, the opera is elaborately staged and costumed, and the presentation was unusually smooth for a first night.

The bulk of the comedy is furnished by Charles W. Meyer as Ko-Ko, the tord high executioner, and Huntington May as Poofh-Bah, lord high everything else. Each is seen at his best and contributes largely to the success of the presentation. As usual, one of the features of the opera are the three little maids, with Grace Orr Myers as Yum-Yum, Edith Bradford as Pitti-Sing, and Millé Murray as Peep-Bo. Miss Myers scores with her solo, "Hearts Do Net Break." The dainty comedy work of Miss Bradford is delightful. She enters into the spirit of the role with an enthusiasm that is infectious. Miss Murray is a close second in this respect and completes the capable trio.

George B. Frothingham is, as usual, excellent in the role of the Mikado, disguised as a wandering minstrel, is interpreted by Harold Biake in his usual manner.
